The illustrations in 'Bible ABC' are really lovely, but the poems seem quite forced, as if the author had to stick to a definite 4 lines for each letter regardless of how the poem sounded in the end. But I guess the author has done a fairly good job, considering that it is pretty hard to make a poem for letters like 'X' and 'Q'.

In their darkest hours, many of God's "pilgrims" have allowed Him to turn the "valley of tears" into a well of blessing (Isaiah 35). Every display of power in the path has given them more vigor for the next step of the pilgrimage. We see this in many stories in the Bible, such as in the lives of Joseph and Daniel.

The Valley of Rephaim is the site of one of David's victories over the Philistines; the author of 2 Samuel notes that there were balsam trees there (verse 23). Another possibility is that the Valley of Baca is the Valley of Achor (Joshua 7:24), the place of Israel's trouble where Achan was executed for bringing guilt upon the nation.
