Brownies and Kalashnikovs: A Saudi Woman's Memoir of American Arabia and Wartime Beirut. Fadia, a Saudi Arab, grew up in the strictly circumscribed and tailor-made 'desert Disneyland' of Aramco (the Arabian American Oil Company). This slice of modern, suburban, middle America was located in Dhahran, Aramco's administrative headquarters in Saudi Arabia, a theocratic Muslim kingdom run according to strict Wahabbi Shari'a law. Eventually, after only brief holidays abroad visiting ...

Fadia Basrawi's memoir Brownies and Kalashnikovs: A Saudi Woman's Memoir of American Arabia and Wartime Beirut (2009) is one of those question marks that ask the reader to enter the perilous zone of liberating oneself from the convention of reading memoirs intensely trapped in a by-gone past, and paradoxically just as intensely focused on the future. A tale of love and darkness that reveals more about its unusual characters than about its usual subjects.

They said home to me, these flares that defined the skyscape of Saudi Arabia's Eastern Province. From above they winked and glowed so prettily in the oncoming dusk ... on the ground they filled the air around us with a nauseating stench of rotten eggs ... pungent testimony of Saudi Arabia's oil wealth that kept the industrialized world so well-oiled and so well-heeled." (Brownies and Kalashnikovs, p.3)
