~~Chapter Cash Budget Problems And Solutions~~

Liquidity Problem One of the primary purposes of a cash budget is to identify liquidity risks whereby an organization may run out of cash. This can occur even if your revenue far exceeds your expenses due to the timing of payments. Running out of cash is a serious problem as you may be unable to pay things such as salary, rent, taxes and bills on time.

If the cash budget shows an increase in net working capital, you may use that increase to reduce operating costs - by repaying borrowed money, for example. If the cash budget shows a decrease in net working capital, you may need to find some way of increasing available cash - by drawing on a line of credit, taking out a bank loan or by factoring. Factoring, which is particularly common in the clothing industry, consists of selling your accounts receivable at a discount to a third-party.
