The argument, first, conceptualizes the current political-economic formation as one of communicative capitalism. It then moves to emphasize specific features of communicative capitalism in light of the fantasies animating them. The fantasy of abundance leads to a shift in the basic unit of communication from the message to the contribution.

Communicative capitalism forces the political energy to produce added value. In its logic the most important act is to consume the endless content stream of communication platforms and take part in producing content. While communicative capitalism has increased the amount of communication, the democratic significance of communication has decreased.

Any particular contribution remains secondary to the fact of circulation" (58). Yo embodies Dean's definition of communicative capitalism: it's a platform that eliminates message in favor of pure circulation. This works because the circulation is what generates value for data collectors, brokers, and analysts.

I'm not sure how many of us have encountered this article (or her later book), but here's the abstract for Jodi Dean's "Communicative Capitalism: Circulation and the Foreclosure of Politics." Dean rethinks just how much "sway" networked communities (that perform the majority of their work online) really have in generating concrete political change.
