~~Theories, Skills & Methods (HI989)~~

In 1835, a French peasant Pierre Marie Rivière, PMR, in a seemingly incomprehensible act of cruelty killed his immediate family. Some contemporaries, including Esquirol, saw in PMR the traces of radical irrationality (psychosis) while others ascribed his deeds to an evil personality. Thus a basic disagreement on the nature of rationality and mad-

These documents were translated and published in English in 1975 as I, Pierre Rivière, having slaughtered my mother, my sister and my brother... A case of parricide in the 19th century. The documents reveal a trial that was focused on establishing whether or not Pierre Rivière was mad, since his sentence, imprisonment or death, depended on the finding of either madness or sanity.

Brother A Case Of Parricide

~~I, Pierre Rivière, having slaughtered my mother, my sister . . .~~

At the center of I, Pierre Rivière is the testimony that Rivière composed in his own hand, in which his motivation for killing his mother and siblings had nothing to do with God, which he admits was just a ploy, and more to do with freeing his father from what he regarded as a life of endless torment at the hands of his mother. The siblings, in turn, were killed because they sided with a woman that Rivière thought of as wholly loathsome.
