In the Solitude of the Cotton Fields is a modern French classic by playwright Bernard-Marie Koltès (1948-89) that portrays the relationship between a dealer and a client. As directed by the innovative French director and sound artist Roland Auzet, in a new English translation by NYU's Judith Graves Miller, the action unfolds on the steps of the Kimmel Center's Grand Staircase as an intense transaction between conflicting desires for drugs, love, connection, and a sense of existence.

In The Solitude of Cotton Fields (Dans la Solitude des Champs de Coton) is an encounter between a Dealer (Alexander Roberts), attempting to tease out desire, and a Client (Christopher Hughes), toying with fear and the catharsis of refusal. It's an endurance game where words gain dramatic weight, a confrontation that is sculptural as much as it is rhetorical.
