The third wave of feminism. The third wave of feminism emerged in the mid-1990s. It was led by so-called Generation Xers who, born in the 1960s and 1970s in the developed world, came of age in a media-saturated and culturally and economically diverse milieu. Although they benefitted significantly from the legal rights and protections that had been obtained by first- and second-wave feminists, they also critiqued the positions and what they felt was unfinished work

Feminism - The third wave of feminism | Britannica

Third Wave feminists were quick to criticize earlier feminists, and to point out the flaws in their movements. An argument often made was of the exclusive nature of the movements, and the marginalization of minorities in the mainstream. The Third Wave thus primarily tried to bring in communities that were previously left out of feminist goals and recognize the intersectionality of oppression. It focused on race and gender and grew out of the sex-positive debates of the second wave.

The third wave is described as focusing little on any type of political agenda, but putting effort toward breaking the boundaries and conceptions of gender and also being heavily inclusive of men. Third Wave Feminism has been met with much criticism and scholars cannot decide on a definition, though Merriam-Webster defines the entire movement, feminism, as "the theory of the political, economic, and social equality of the sexes."
