Pathological Altruism - Wikipedia
In essence, pathological altruism might be thought of as any behavior or personal tendency in which either the stated aim or the implied motivation is to promote the welfare of another. But instead of overall beneficial outcomes, this altruism instead has irrational (from the point of view of an outside observer) and substantial negative consequences to the other or even to the self.

Pathological altruism refers to sincere attempts to help others that instead harms others or oneself and where this harm could have been reasonably anticipated. It is often caused by cognitive and/or emotional biases that blind people to the potentially harmful consequences of their actions.

Altruism is defined in different ways throughout the book, but the common theme is that altruism involves "unselfish concern for the welfare of others" as well as actions that are beneficial to them.<sup>1</sup> Our efforts to do good often have unintended and unanticipated consequences that are detrimental both to the object of the charity and to the person performing the good deeds.

Pathological Altruism—An Introduction - Oxford Scholarship
One phrase I have heard repeated around nationalist circles on the Internet is ‘pathological altruism’. When analysing the psychology of a large group of people – as big as a nation, for example – this concept means an ingrained kindness in a people that has been taken to such an extreme as to be harmful to the group of people in question.

Pathological altruism was particularly associated with aspects of vulnerable narcissism— including the need for admiration and a high frequency of shame— as well as fear of rejection, losing emotional contact, and losing control. These fears were reflected in the reasons for helping others: those scoring higher on pathological altruism were much more likely to report that they help others to avoid rejection and criticism and to gain approval and to please others.
