Rethinking Curriculum in Art Education by Marilyn G. Stewart

Rethinking Curriculum in Art is meant to supplement, not replace, college-level curriculum texts that focus on the history and philosophy of curriculum and instruction. The authors put forth the notion of using an "enduring idea" (themes, topics or issues that reflect large questions about human experience--for example, power, conflict, life and death, survival, etc.) as the foundation for curriculum development.

Repackaging curriculum: If you teach drawing, it may be pretty "easy" to repackage your curriculum. Use sketchbooks for portability, create to-go boxes with materials, and flip demonstrations to videos loaded to your Learning Management System or provide handouts for students. But what happens when you teach ceramics or jewelry/metals or even darkroom photography?
