Conceptually, the peer review process can lead to distortion of the results from the viewpoint of the evidence user, akin to bias. Peer review bias can be defined as a violation of impartiality in the evaluation of a submission. 8 We propose that this transgression of neutrality standards can affect the dissemination of research (ie, denying publication, which would be a form of publication bias), or modify the spin and communication of findings (affecting the impact and implementation of ...

Peer Review Bias: A Critical Review - ScienceDirect

Review authors need to do more than just state quality-related data that was extracted. The implication of this data on a review's findings must be addressed. For example, just because review authors list sample sizes of the primary studies does not mean they have assessed study sample.
