 The paper considers the complex relationship between sport, ideology and the wielding of power. An outline is provided of the sociology of sport and the inadequacies of existing analyses which seriously misconceive both the relation of sport to culture and the relation of sport as a cultural form to economic, political and ideological processes.

 Unquestionably, explicit links between ideology and sports have their roots in the work of the Frankfurt School thinker Theodor Adorno. In sum, Adorno argued that sport, like many other forms of popular culture, was a frivolous activity which reinforced the inequalities of the capitalist system and prohibited critical thought. At the heart of Adorno's critique lay two defining principles: participant competition and the consumption of the sporting spectacle.

 The cultural turn enabled (mainly male) sociologists who were 'closet' sports aficionados (fans), as well as those who had felt victimized by sports (through compulsory physical education at school or by the ideologies embedded in the sports media), to interrogate, critically and self reflexively, their own and others' cultural tastes and consumption. Adopted excessively, such an approach can be condemned as unscientific, impressionistic, narcissistic, and self indulgent.
