The German Ideology Summary. Buy Study Guide. Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels begin with the question of what makes human beings unique as a species. They propose that humans alone can be said to have a "history.". This history, on their view, is fundamentally the history of the development of the modes of production and forces of production available to human beings at any given time, and that these essential features of human life are inextricably bound up in the history of the ...

The German Ideology is a set of manuscripts written by Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels around April or early May 1846. Marx and Engels did not find a publisher, but the work was later retrieved and published for the first time in 1932 by David Riazanov through the Marx-Engels Institute in Moscow. The first part of the book is an exposition of Marx's "materialist conception of history", though recent research for the new Marx Engels Gesamtausgabe indicates that much of the 'system' in it was creat

In The German Ideology, Marx and Engels have not yet achieved the sharp definition and consistency of these core concepts—private property, labor and division of labor, intercourse/exchange, and the means and forces of production—characteristic of their (especially Marx's) mature works. "Intercourse" is, in this work, often used to refer to both strictly economic exchange (i.e. trade) and social and interpersonal relations more broadly.

The emergence of liberal, constitutional states, corresponds to the German Idealist idea of the state as the ultimate expression of freedom; in camera obscura it makes the state rather than civil society the objectification of freedom (individual, self-interest). German idealism is a crucial part of the liberal state, because the state expresses ideas that would make this actually true, but Marx shows how through a materialist conception freedom is actually being constrained.

The German Ideology Quotes and Analysis. "The ideas of the ruling class are in every epoch the ruling ideas, i.e. the class which is the ruling material force of society, is at the same time its ruling intellectual force. The class which has the means of material production at its disposal, has control at the same time over the means of mental production, so that thereby, generally speaking, the ideas of those who lack the means of mental production are subject to it.
