This book is an extended, critical reflection on the state of interreligious dialogue in its modern version. While there has been some important writing in the field of comparative theology, there has been no extended, critical reflection on the state of the discipline in its modern version, its strengths and problematic areas as it grows as a serious theological and scholarly discipline. This ...

Comparative Theology (CT) in its modern form is a relatively new field of study, and debate on the theorisation of various of its aspects and its credentials for inclusion in the academic study of religion has already generated a burgeoning literature.<sup>1</sup>In a recent review, S. Mark Heim has commented that CT in the sense used in this essay:

Comparative theology is a relatively new discipline within theology, which holds together "comparative" and "theology" in creative tension. It represents a particular type of theological practice committed to deep interreligious learning while staying rooted in a particular religious tradition. Moreover, while many of its proponents come from the Christian religious tradition, it can have as a starting point the theology of any religious tradition.
