Abstract. Online social networking (OSN) sites play many roles ranging from communication to entertainment. The current paper presents an analysis of the recently emerged OSN phenomenon of the selfie (self-portrait photographs of oneself). In two studies involving a total of 1296 men and women, we tested the prediction that selfie-sharing on various OSN sites (including Facebook) is positively related to social exhibitionism, extraversion, and self-esteem.

A person's home is a great location to portray their personality. It's a common technique used by celebrity portrait photographers in order to portray the celebrity's "real personality" and not their varying on-screen personas. This is where you'll see them most relaxed and open to giving their personality to a photo. Photo by Vickie Cook
