However, the Vikings invasion began to grind to a halt as division began to form within their ranks and their armies began to fracture into two separate forces. This would be the beginning of the end of their campaign, as the Vikings suffered a significant defeat at the hands of Wessex, the only region to hold out against the Vikings. Led by King Alfred, the armies of Wessex defeated half of the Viking forces in the Battle of Edington in 878, forever crushing their hopes of dominating all of ...
